OPPOSITE TOP:
Pollen fan
Pollen and nectar are the only source of food for the sweat bees, or Halictidae, and the females collect it to provide a food source for larvae. The eggs are laid in underground nests.

OPPOSITE BOTTOM:
Metallic green
Most sweat bees have a shiny green body. However, many species also show off the warning stripes of other kinds of bee. This is an example of mimicry, where all striped bees and wasps benefit from sending out the same signal that warns attackers to beware of a sting. Sweat bees can sting but the weapon is not a powerful one.

ABOVE:
Big family
The sweat bee family comprises more than 3,100 species, making it the second largest bee family. Most species are small for bees, measuring between 6 and 8mm (0.24 and 0.31in).

Woodland kingfisher
As the name suggests, this African species makes its life in the trees, hunting for insects from a branch.

RIGHT:
Oriental dwarf kingfisher
Aptly named, this Asian species is typically about half the size of its cousin at about 14cm (5in) long.

CRIME AND THE PARANORMAL

Even as far back as the 13th century the Chinese appreciated that, at a crime scene, “the difference of a hair” could change whether or not a crime was solved. Since then, criminal investigators have learned how to interpret vital testimony that is written in the language of fingerprints and flakes of skin, gradients of teeth and bone, splashes of blood, flecks of paint and traces of chemicals, a splinter of glass, or a uniquely striated bullet.

Amber's crime and paranormal titles explore everything from the geographic profiling of a serial killer to deploying psychic detectives to help resolve longstanding murders.

About the authors

Brian Innes trained as a scientist and worked as a biochemical researcher and successful musician before turning to writing. He published a large number of articles and books on forensic science, including Bodies of Evidence, Serial Killers and Profile of a Criminal Mind.

Jenny Randles and Peter Hough have been professional authors for many years. They have written 15 books as co-authors and more than 50 books between them individually, ranging across many aspects of strange phenomena. Their work has been serialised in leading newspapers across the world.

Review: Abandoned World War II Aircraft, Tanks & Warships

This fascinating coffee table book sits at the intersection of history and travel with an impressive collection of photographs of artifacts that litter the globe.... While the photos are the book's biggest draw, the well researched captions are its best attribute, offering much needed context for many of the images, but also imparting interesting and lesser-known stories about the war in some of its most far-flung locales. read it. ABOUT THE AUTHOR – World War II Battlefields

Paul Woodadge is a battlefield guide, author and historian living in Normandy, France. He has spent nearly three decades bringing the history of World War II to an audience of both tourists and arm-chair history buffs through his tours and as a guest on numerous TV shows. He is the host of WW2TV, a popular YouTube channel that brings together the world's best military historians to discuss the conflict.

ABANDONED IN PHOTOGRAPHS

Despite the gleaming surface, there is another side to London – one of secrets, dilapidation and mystery. From disused Underground stations to immense Victorian sewers, from crumbling Art Deco cinemas to overgrown cemeteries, Abandoned London celebrates haunting relics from a time gone by. Also new in the hugely successful Abandoned series is Abandoned Asylums and Institutions, showcasing some of the weirdest, scariest school buildings, hospitals and mental asylums from across the world; Abandoned Train Stations, exploring the wreckage of disused termini and overgrown platforms; and Abandoned Islands – sometimes idyllic, sometimes desolate places no longer inhabited.

Chase, Suffolk, England
Part of the Chase Country Park, the station was on the former Great Eastern line between Sudbury and Cambridge, closed in 1967. It became a visitor centre and museum, though these facilities are currently closed. Opened in 1863, its picturesque design is put together from modular designs (the GRB was a freight company) with the stationmaster's house as the larger part.

Weymouth Quay Station, Dorset, England
Trains ran to and from London to connect with Channel Island ferries. Opened in 1863, the short branch to the quay passed through the centre of the town and became one of the original motor power used 1880, when small steam locomotives took over. Though regular services ended in 1967, special services used it until May 1999. The railway buildings date from the 1860s.

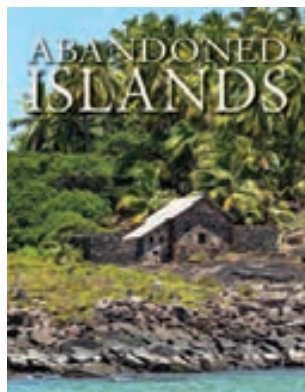

Alton Towers, Staffordshire, England
On the North Staffordshire Railway's Churnet Valley line, opened in 1849, this station served the village of Alton and the nearby stately home, Alton Towers (now an amusement park). The Italianate style was unusual for this railway. The line was closed in 1963, and in 1979 the buildings were converted to provide holiday accommodation.

HISTORY

Amber offers hundreds of history titles, ranging from a compact pictorial account of the infamous sinking of the Titanic passenger liner by an iceberg in 1912, to Queens, a new illustrated guide to the greatest queens, consorts and empresses from Europe to Japan and everywhere in between. Other highlights include a photographic guide to the 1986 nuclear disaster in Chernobyl, and the impact of the catastrophe on the surrounding area decades later.

MILITARY ATLASES

Amber's military atlases provide comprehensive visual and guides to key conflicts and warfare. With extensive organizational diagrams and dynamic full-colour maps created by an expert cartographer, each atlas details the strengths and organisational structures by campaign and major battle. Detailed examinations provide a key insight for each atlas, forming a key resource for students and experts alike.

An MQ-1C Gray Eagle of 10th Airlift Squadron is shown in flight over a desert landscape.

MQ-1C GRAY EAGLE SPECIFICATIONS
Weight: 1,100 kg (2,425 lb)
Wingspan: 17.1 m (56 ft 1 in)
Length: 12.1 m (39 ft 8 in)
Height: 3.7 m (12 ft 1 in)
Engine: 1x Pratt & Whitney Canada PT6C-67
Power: 1,100 hp (815 kW)
Range: 1,100 km (684 mi)
Service ceiling: 13,700 m (45,000 ft)
Speed: 1,100 km/h (684 mph)
Max payload: 1,100 kg (2,425 lb)

In Chapter 3, Russian intelligence, reconnaissance and surveillance (ISR) UAVs, such as the Orion-10, greatly reduced the time between target identification and an artillery fire mission. Whereas conventional spotting methods would take between 20 and 30 minutes between identification and firing, the UAVs cut this down to about five minutes. Due to the effectiveness of intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance UAVs, it is no surprise that both sides made a high priority of either jamming UAVs or shooting them down. As the war continued and more and more specifically military drones were lost, both sides and Ukraine in particular started to replace their expensive purpose-built advanced technology military UAVs with adapted commercial models, thus significantly range, altitude and payload over previous systems. The Gray Eagle's design brief covered a variety of challenging service requirements that included persistent reconnaissance, surveillance and target acquisition (RSTA) as well as attack operations. Although early versions of the Gray Eagle exhibited reliability issues, these were addressed by the manufacturers and in July 2013 an improved Gray Eagle was launched. The new model featured improved fuel and payload capacity as well as a modified Lycoming T55-L120 Heavy Fuel Engine (HFE). The engine is designed to run on either jet fuel or diesel to support the US Army's 'single fuel in the battlefield' concept. The Gray Eagle is also fitted with an automatic take-off and landing system. The Improved Gray Eagle (IGE) made enough of an impression for the US Army to order it for its intelligence and special forces groups. Deliveries were made to 10th Special Operations Aviation Regiment (Airborne) (10th SOAR) with a target of 12 aircraft each for two SOAR companies. Each package of 12 aircraft is accompanied by a support system that includes six universal ground control systems, nine ground data terminals, 12 mobile ground control stations, one ground data terminal; Light Mobile Tactical Vehicles (LMTVs) and other ground support assets operated and maintained by a company of 105 soldiers. In June 2022, it was reported that the US Government was considering the sale of four MQ-1C medium-altitude long-endurance (MALE) drones to Ukraine. This would give extra offensive ability to the Ukrainian forces, but would also require considerable training for operators to manage this sophisticated system.

INTELLIGENCE, SURVEILLANCE & RECONNAISSANCE

LIGHT ALL-TERRAIN VEHICLES

MR161 GROWLER
Country of origin: United States
Manufacturer: General Dynamics
Operators: US Marine Corps
Service: 2005-present
Operators: US Marine Corps
Marine Expeditionary Units (MEU)

Grow Drive: 3.0
Weight: 2,000 kg (4,400 lb)
Dimensions: Length 4.14m (13 ft 6 in), Width 1.5m (4 ft 9 in), Height 1.5m (4 ft 9 in)
Powerplant: 2.0 litre 4-cylinder turbo-diesel
Range: 650 km (400 miles)
Speed: 120 km/h (75 mph)
Weapons: 10 40mm automatic Browning machine gun, M19 40mm (1.6in) automatic grenade launcher

The MR161 Growler was ordered by US Marine Corps Systems Command (MCS) in November 2004 and, after several delays in development, it was deployed by US Marine Expeditionary Units (AMUs) in January 2009. Although intended for infantry use, due to its use limitations the MR161 Growler was mostly deployed by special operations units for reconnaissance and light strike missions. It was also used as a logistics and medical vehicle, and could be fitted with a system that allowed the vehicle to be operated remotely. Like most vehicles of its type, the MR161 Growler had limited armour protection, relying instead on speed and agility to keep out of harm's way. Having seen limited action with the Marine Corps, the MR161 Growler is due to be replaced. Reports suggest that it will not be missed.

MR161 Growler
The MR161 Growler is a light and highly mobile, providing expeditionary forces with the ability to tackle challenging off-road terrain to achieve their objectives. The vehicles come in various forms, including patrol and armed, with capacity ranging from two to six personnel, depending on the version. Designed to be deployed in forward areas, the vehicles can carry troops along with their essential equipment, along with enough ammunition for defence and attack. Although they lack armour protection, the MR161 vehicles use speed and off-road mobility to evade enemy contact when necessary, though the vehicles can also be used for lightning raids. They can travel over terrain that would not be accessible to larger vehicles. Roll-over bars provide protection for the crew, and they can be easily folded when the vehicle is loaded into an aircraft. There is a small cargo area at the rear of the vehicle that can be adapted in various ways, either to carry equipment and supplies, such as spare fuel and water, or to be used for stretchers. It can also carry extra crew if necessary on two rear-facing seats. If more carrying capacity is needed, a special off-road trailer can be towed, adding 454kg (1,000lb) of capacity. The patrol versions are powered by a three-cylinder Polaris ProStar 900 petrol engine. The diesel version is powered by a Kohler turbo-diesel engine. The MR161 features a system whereby the standard two-wheel drive can switch automatically to four-wheel drive when extra traction is required. The transmission is automatic and continuously variable. Power steering reduces driver strain in rough terrain. The vehicles are fitted with independent dual A-arm suspension at the front and independent trailing arms at the rear. The vehicles can be fitted with 5.56mm (0.21in) or 7.62mm (0.3in) machine guns or with a 40mm (1.6in) grenade launcher for either defence or attack. The open structure allows crew to use their personal weapons for defence or assault. An infrared (IR) light can be used when driving in black-out mode at night. The vehicle can also be fitted with durable MOLLE-coated roof panels for overhead protection from the elements.

MR161 GROWLER
The MR161 is a model of compact design, providing special forces with mobility along with easy transportation of their essential equipment.

MOTORCYCLES & QUAD BIKES

Motorcycles in World War I were highly prized as a means of sending messages at a time when battlefield telephone communications were rather basic. Dispatch riders whizzed around on hazardous roads, dodging sniper fire to deliver vital orders. When World War II broke out, most of the British motorcycle manufacturers were given contracts to supply military specification motorcycles. BSA would produce 150,000 of its M20 model alongside its armaments production. Triumph was also heavily involved in production, despite losing its Coventry factory to German bombs. Norton produced its 16H and Big 4 motorcycles, while Royal Enfield produced the WJ3RE 'Flying Flea', a mini-motorcycle small enough to be carried by airborne forces. In the United States, Harley-Davidson produced its classic VT model, which would also have a profound influence in the post-war era on 'biker' culture. Although some British models, such as the Norton Big 4, were also produced with a sidecar, the real experts in this area proved to be the Germans. The Bittburg that took Europe by storm relied upon speed and the speedhead was often fuel-injected motorcycle and sidecar units. These Krautchicken units, organized within panzer formations, carried out rapid mobile assault and reconnaissance. German industry produced a wide variety of motorcycles for the Wehrmacht, including the BMW R75 and sidecar, the

MOTORCYCLES & QUAD BIKES

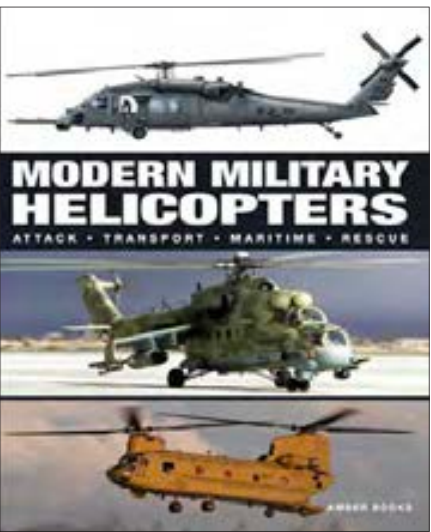

DKW RT125 and NZ250, a variety of models by NSU, and the Zundapp 600cc NSV 'sidecar' rigs, including the KS 750 flat iron. Other countries produced their own motorcycles, including Belgium with its FN M12 military model, and France with its Gnome-Rhône 750 Armo. While the Bittburg in Western Europe mostly happened during hot summer weather when the ground was dry, the invasion of Soviet Russia in Operation Barbarossa was run into the Russian winter and the snow melt. Vehicles of all types were bogged down and the heavy motorcycles, with their low ground clearance, fared badly. Their low-clearance air filter with mud, which also got into the mixture. In many ways, the end of the big military motorcycle was over. Something else had happened that pushed the military motorcycle into the sidelines – the Wot's Jeep. Here was a four-wheel drive light vehicle with plenty of power that could go almost everywhere and was both rugged and stable. Looking forward to the first Gulf War in 1991, the motorcycles that made brief appearances were somewhat different to their World War II predecessors. These were high-riding trail bikes bred to tackle rough terrain. Nimble and speedy, they presented a low profile and were seen ahead of special forces columns, probing the Iraqi desert ready to swiftly report back on any signs of trouble.

Special Forces Land Vehicles

Since the inception of Special Forces units during the early years of World War II, unique and operation-specific vehicles have been developed for units that work in extreme environments and behind enemy lines, often moving quickly and with stealth to strike when least expected. Many of the vehicles are designed for special terrain, and can operate in either the desert or Arctic, while some can be dropped from aircraft or deployed amphibiously.

World War II Tanks: Western Allies 1939-45

This is a fine book, beautifully reproduced. You get high-quality side elevations in colour of just about every tank used by the western allies. ... The book includes brief details of each armoured vehicle used, some very well chosen photographs of tanks in action and, finally, some really interesting appendices.
